Miss Destinn as Elsa for First Time Here

Appears in "Lohengrin" at the Metropolitan and/Wins Fresh

An Elsa new to New York arrived or the banks of the painted River Scheidt in ast night's repetition of "Lohengrin" at the Metropolitan Opera House. She was Emmy Destinn, who never before ad sung the rôle here, although it is in took her beautiful siging of the lyric ich as a matter of course. She sang it wonderfully, particularly her prayer in the first act, the sentimental music of the second, and then, hird act. There was not much spirituality initially, there was not indee spiritually, inough in her acting or in her appearance, but her singing atoned for any such lack. Mme. Homer, appearing for only the second time this season, sang Ortrud dramatically. Mr. Jadlawker, in the title art, was in admirable voice. Mr. Grisvold as the King and Mr. Welli, as Telranund completed the list of familiar principals and Mr. Herz conducted painstakens and Mr. Herz conducted painstakens and Mr. Herz conducted painstakens. and Mr. Herz conducted painstak-and highly complexed complications. Mr. Nash was the imposter, Mr. Eddinger the real Gladwin and Mr. Francis D. McGinn the policeman.

The story was interestingly preseted and the acting good. Miss Ruth Maycliffe in the part of a young woman planning to elope with the imposter, but who later falls in love with the real Gladwin, played with the seriousness that is welcomed in ferce. Not that the whole play rested on her alone. Far from it, for the stage was constantly alive with the players, who flitted in and out and kept every one laughing, as farce should.

Then there were many clever and bright things said. "I am not a real crook, I am only a picture desler," said Mr. Nash, and the audlence laughed. "Omaha?" said Mr. Percy Ames, who played a young inglishman excellently, "Omaha? What's hat?"

With a little imagination those on the Hoboken pier of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company yesterday afternoon might have thought themselves in the Aibs. The temperature was just about low enough, and the ideea was fostered by the appearance of Mr. Bruno Granichstaedten, a German composer, who hurried down the gangplank of the Prinz Friedrich Will.

their word bad to be taken, for the oldest inhabitants of Hoboken said they had never seen the like.

Mr. Granichstaedten's trousers were of a rough brown material and terminated abruptly just below the knees, somewhat in the manner of bicycle trousers. Stockings and his low shoes carried out the color scheme. So did the jacket, but his nat was of green telt, with a small quilt feather. Hundreds drew overcoats about them and shivered, but Mr. Granichstaeden, in his airy costume, scorned drafts and the snow that filtered through cracks in the pier shod.
